Chapter 1 by nicola vintis

Leona was an average girl, with an average cat, and average parents. It was nearly her 13th birthday only 6 days and there was nothing to lose. But everyday, whilst she walked to school, the most un-average thing was the wall. No one but her walked passed it on the way to school, it was a grey brick wall with nothing but a keep out and stay away sign.

She clambered on to school nobody in her way just stone paths and empty roads. Her bag slid down her back like a snake so she yanked it back up.

Only a few more miles to walk no more than 3.

Finally she came to the zebra crossing before the corner which take you to the school gates. Leona was in Mrs holdes' class as she began to speak an idea drifted into her head
